History 510: Introduction to Graduate Studies
Dr. Petrov
The purpose of this course is to introduce beginning graduate students to the varied strategies and conceptual tools historians use to study the past. It will provide students with an introduction to the history of the discipline, give them practice interpreting theoretically sophisticated texts, and expose them to important recent methodological debates in the field.

History 531: People, Piety and Power: Varieties of Religious Experience in Late Medieval and Reformation Europe
Dr. Bast
This graduate colloquium will focus on significant scholarship and primary sources in translation, reflecting varieties of religious experience in Late Medieval and Reformation Europe. A running theme will be the intersection between people, piety and power — how religion has been marshaled to order and/or challenge established hierarchies. Among the topics we will explore are urban reform, saints and sanctity, gendered identity and relationships, and the battle for vernacular lay Christianity. Readings will be available through Open Access or on our Canvas site. All students will take turns leading class discussion over common readings, and the development of a formal research agenda.

History 532: Readings in Modern European and German History
Dr. M. Black
This colloquium will feature a cross-section of cutting-edge work in modern European and recent German history.

History 543: History of the New South
Dr. Bland
This graduate seminar will examine major questions within the historiography of the post-Reconstruction South. Major themes of the course will include: the uneven road toward the “Solid South” as a political project; the transformation of the region’s economic and ecological landscape; the rise of Jim Crow modernity and low-road capitalism; the hegemonic reach of the South in U.S. foreign policy, American popular culture, and the nation’s collective memory; and the emergence of social movements for labor rights, Black freedom, and gender equality. Special emphasis will be placed on the rise of Southern Studies as an interdisciplinary approach to understanding the region’s past. This course satisfies requirements for the graduate certificate in Africana Studies. All graduate students from all departments are welcome. Meets with AFST 510.
History 544: Americanist Historiography
Dr. Harlow
Required for all Americanist graduate students. This readings seminar explores some of the major themes and significant historiographic debates in American history up through the era of the Civil War. It serves as essential preparation for comprehensive exams, and furthermore provides significant background information for teaching the first half of the U.S. history survey.

History 580: Gender Theory for Historians
Dr. Ritchey
This seminar will introduce students to foundational theories of gender and sexuality, as well as their applications in the practice of historians. The class is designed for all fields of study, and our readings will range widely in geographic and temporal scope. Some possible readings include: Michel Foucault, History of Sexuality vol. 1; Carole Steedman, Landscape for a Good Woman; Saidiya Hartman, Wayward Lives, Beautiful Experiments; Caroline Walker Bynum, Holy Feast and Holy Fast; George Chauncey, Gay New York; Jen Manion, Female Husbands; Leah DeVun, The Shape of Sex; Lynn Thomas, Politics of the Womb; Natalie L. Kimball, An Open Secret. Assignments will include book reviews, podcasts and other digital applications, class presentations, and a final historiographic essay.
